Booth Heights

Below are the different general height options. We've tried to highlight the different uses for each, and how they fit into your décor. But as always, the choice is yours. Tell us what you need or ask our advice.

Standard Height:

This is typically a table height of 28" to 30" and a seat height of 18"-19". It is the most common height in restaurants.

Not only do most people find this height very comfortable, it is also the only height that complies with ADA regulations.

Counter Height:

This is typically a table height of 34" to 36" and a seat height of 26". They are typically more casual and make it easier to talk with people who may be standing. They can work well in small areas because they give the illusion that they take up less space.

Bar Height:

This is typically a table height of 40" to 42" and a seat height of 30". This taller, thinner height is very good for small spaces and perfect for "bar area" tables. They have the same advantages as counter height furniture but even more so, because the difference between standing and sitting is so minimal, they create an extremely casual and "fun" atmosphere.

Notable Options

All booths and banquettes have several options that can be manufactured to match your specific needs, décor, and customizations.

- Booth shape and length
- Seat depth (standard 18")
- Back height (standard 36")

- Back pitch
- Materials (upholstered or wooden)
- Upholstery styles and tufting

- Wood species and finishes
- LEED compliant materials available

CRUMB WIPE

Crumb wipes are added so that crumbs do not fall behind the seat. They are available in wood, vinyl, or laminate depending on booth construction.
